- R Responses

Environmental report DPSIR-based

Driving forces, such as population and economic growth, urbanisation and agricultural intensification, result in emissions of pollutants and other pressures which affect the state of the environment and, in turn, may impact on human health. Responses may address the driving forces themselves as well as seek to reduce their direct pressures or indirect effects on the state of the environment and human health.

State of the Environment Reporting Information System (SERIS)

SERIS is an inventory of national state of the environment reports. The database contains brief publications details for recent (1997 onwards) reports for countries included in the EEA's third assessment report. SERIS contains links to the reports and to the main organisation involved in the report. Reports can be identified by their geographic coverage or the year of publication. National and multi-national reports are included in the database.
